Before the big pageantry opening parade, there was opportunity to visit the side show, which was located in the bowling alley. Here a complete line of frenks occupied elevated seats or cages behind a railing, in regulation circus style, with Alexander Finlayson as manager to explain the fine points of each in lurid language. First was the wild man, securely eaged and rag-ing behind his bars. Maude, the bearded lady, had a seat next to Esophagus, the sword swallower, and Sadie, the snake charmer, fondled a boxfull of reptiles as the showman approached. Next was the strong man, who played with 500 pound weights, and then came one of the star attractions, a cageful of with animals including ham a careful of the star attractions.

Hezekiah Hopkinson and his wife, Miranda, who were in from the country to see the show, created quite a diversion when Miranda got seprated from Hezekiah and was finally found with the aid of the police. Hezekiah was found to be loaded with two gold bricks, and a family row started at once, resulting in the two being hustled off the floor just in time to let the big parade come on which opened up the circus proper. It made a big hit, as it comprised ell the circus troupe, including two elephants, a horse, and the wild animals of the side show. An orcheestra played throughout the evening.
